The researchers found that middle-aged men with high fitness levels face a lower risk for lung and colorectal cancer, but not prostate cancer.